Already, more than 100 companies have joined the program, including BMW, which has an app called M Laptimer that allows racing enthusiasts to use their GoPro to automatically record car speed and location and replay video of the drive. Fisher-Price is developing GoPro-compatible mounts that attach to children's jumperoos and walkers so parents can capture milestones from their little one's perspective. "GoPro had a shaky start to 2016"; after weaker-than-expected sales in 2015, the company laid off 7 percent of its workforce in January.
